The Consequences of Magic

Have you ever seen one of those magic shows that completely amazed you, then after a short deliberation you gave up trying to work out how the magician did it? You see, the art of a magician is to convince you that what you've seen is the real deal. Magic before your very own eyes. Well that my friends, is exactly what you're supposed to think.

"It was mirrors!"

"Sleight of hand!"

"Camera tricks!"

"Lighting effects!"

"Altered perception!"

"Probability!"

"A numbers' game!"

"Counting or maths!"

You've heard them all, right? For me, they are my cover story. A fallacy. You see folks, I have always been capable of actual magic, not trickery, but unequivocally the real thing. What is magic anyway?

If you were able to travel back in time, say one hundred years, and you showed someone a video playing on your tablet or smartphone, you could easily convince them that was magic, right?

The rain was beating down hard, so hard that it had created a river of water all the way down Central Avenue. I crossed the road with my suitcase of props in hand. The rainwater filled my shoes as I stepped off the pavement. I made my way across to the other side, squelching my shoes as I did.

An exit sign flickered in the darkness, above the tradesman entrance into the 'Black Swan', the venue for tonight's gig. Outside the door, now holding my suitcase
